On Potential of EU Eastern Partnership

J.Sedjakin

The article contains a characteristic of the EU program «Eastern Partnership» (EP) as well as stages of its creation and consecutive introduction in the relations of Bruxelles with the neighbors captured by this program: Ukraine, Moldova, Belarus, republics of Transcaucasia. It is emphasized, in particular, that, developing EP the European Union creates some kind of «added value» to existing structure of mutual relations with East neighbors.

On the one hand, it is possible to consider this project strengthening of operating European policy of the neighborhood, on the other one it looks like a new offer more adapted for real conditions and opportunities of neighbors. Within the limits of Partnership each country is considered individually in view of its ability and will to take up obligations, however, the preference is given the countries which achieved the best results in implementation of Plans of action and, earlier, Agreements on partnership and cooperation. With them EU is going to consistently develop the Eastern Partnership on each of four basic thematic platforms of the program: development of democracy, perfection of an executive and control system, economic integration and the regional policy. A start is already given to realization of several so-called «flank» initiatives, for example, in spheres of the organization of borders and development of energetic cooperation. It is noted, that Bruxelles expresses readiness to also cover Russia with the EP program, – in case of Russia's expressed interest, – for example, on projects concerning to the Kaliningrad area. The basic conclusion of the article: all the projects which are put forward in the EP framework are aiming political purposes rather than achievement of economic goals; and those political aims seem to pursue consecutive replacement of Russia from the Eastern Europe as well as easing the Russian influence on integration processes in the post Soviet area, in particular in the CIS countries.

Key words: Eastern Partnership, the European Union, the initiative of Poland, financing, development of democracy, strengthening of the state institutes, control of borders, helping small business companies, civil society, energetic security, an alternative tool of EU expansion, regional policy, «flank» initiatives, potential of the stable neighborhood, agreement on association, easing of external influence.

The South China Sea: a Long Road to Peace and Cooperation

G.Lokshin

The article of Grigory Lokshin based on the materials of the recent International Symposium in Hanoi (Vietnam) is devoted to the situation in the South China Sea which was considered by many most competent experts as a flash point of international tensions in the Asia-Pacific. The problem of the territorial sovereignty on the islands and the sea spaces with its huge resources remains unsolved and becomes more and more dangerous. The real threat arises that the competition for the energetic and fishing resources of the region would aggravate the conflict and produce a strong wave of nationalism in China as well as in the other littoral countries and the whole process would go out of any control. Just why, according to the author, the protection of the stability and predictability of the situation in the region, assured by a set of broadening confidence building measures (CBMs) and deepening cooperation in joint exploitation of the sea resources and most important sea lines of communication (SLOC) becomes extremely important for maintenance of peace and security not only regional but global as well.

Key words: South China sea, Asia-Pacific, Spratly, ASEAN, security, cooperation.
