Necessitas publica major est quam privata

S.Daniluk

The author challenges the modern concept of human rights and freedoms.

It is stated that the western-minded doctrine of natural rights, which has been formalised in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international legislation pursuant thereto, leaves out a wide diversity of centuries-old religious and moral, cultural and intellectual values and traditions of nations exterior to the occidental civilization.

The present-day West is involved in a hazardous absolutisation of several rights and freedoms that are contrary to Christian ethics and the depravity is often justified by human rights.

Therefore the modern human rights doctrine needs to be developed in the light of universally shared intercivilization values.

Key words: Christian religious values, Universally recognized principles and standards of international law, Liberal concept of human rights and freedoms, Intercivilization values.

About the author: DANILUK Stanislav Evgenievich – judge of the Constitutional Court of the Republik of Belfrus.
